PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION:

This house is a large example of early colonial architecture with late nineteenth century alterations and several rear additions. It is a two and a half story house with five bays and a prominent dual pitched, hipped Mansard roof which wraps around the house. The roof material is wood shingles. There are four roof dormers on the façade with segmental roofs and two on each side. The house has an interior chimney punctures the roof near the intersection of the change in roof pitch. Most of the windows on this stone house have shutters. A low-pitched roof on the façade is one story tall and supported by four square columns. There are two doors on the façade in the second and fourth bays.

There have been several stone additions to this house. One of them off the right side of the façade is a two-story unit resting on a lower foundation so that the windows on the second floor line up with the windows on the first floor of the house. This addition (perhaps a summer kitchen) has a tall interior chimney emerging through the roof on one side. Another addition on the rear consists of a two-story unit on a perpendicular axis connecting the core to a unit parallel to the core with a pronounced gambrel gable.

Associated Resource (Barn) A stone barn in excellent condition is associated with this house.

Classification: This house (and barn) are in excellent condition and warrant a Class II resource classification.
