PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION:

This house is a vernacular farmhouse. Built c. 1800, this house is a two story, three bay house built of stone and formerly clad in stucco. The core is a 15 x 28 building with some additions that make it 28 x 45. It has end gables and an interior end chimney on the left side of the façade. The roof is covered with asphalt shingles and extends on the main façade ove. A two-story, full-length porch on the façade under an extension of the roofline rests upon four square columns and shades a six-paneled door. A small but distinct crown molding over the door is a fine period detail. A two story addition on the rear of this house is frame and has two one story wings of its own.

Associated Resources: Associated with this house are several other buildings: a modern tenant house, a modern garage, a small shed, and a stone springhouse

- (1) Springhouse. The springhouse is a one story, end gabled building with wood shingles and an entry porch resting on two columns with braces. The upper portion of the springhouse is frame.
- (2) Shed Small board and batten shed.

Classification: The extended roof line make this a Class II resource.
